News this week

A limited company

Good news, the Save Hulme Hippodrome campaign group is now a registered company, limited by guarantee. In the coming days we will be putting in place the policies needed for our finances and for good governance arrangements.

We are also keen to invite self-nominations to be a director from people who reflect the diversity of our supporters and community. Please also make contact if you'd like an informal chat first.

Gill Wright

It's with great sadness that we record the passing of Gill Wright earlier this month. Gill was a leading member of the campaign to save Victoria Baths in south Manchester, a Grade II* listed building, and we've previously mentioned here the lessons we are still learning for our campaign from her work and magnificent legacy. Her obituary was published this week in The Guardian. RIP <https://www.theguardian.com/culture/2021/mar/24/gillian-wright-obituary>

Drone video survey for roof repairs

We are hoping to be able to organise a drone video of the roof and guttering issues (holes, blockages, water ingress) of Hulme Hippodrome to encourage the new owner to take good care of the building and make it weatherproof.

Rising from the Rubble

This encouraging headline is for a news item that tells the story of a historic pub in London that has been rebuilt - brick by brick - by a developer after it was illegally bulldozed to make way for flats. Carlton Tavern will reopen soon, six years after the local council's planning committee forced the rebuilt to start. We and many campaigners hope this legal precedent will help prevent developers demolishing any other sites.
